INTRODUCTION

This report analyses competitor placement for food barcode scanner and nutrition apps across the iOS App Store and Google Play. It evaluates the discoverability of Food Remedy within three key categories: Health & Fitness, Food & Drink, and Lifestyle.

Findings highlight that Health & Fitness is the most dominant category, hosting leading apps like MyFitnessPal, Fooducate, Fatsecret, and Fastic. Food & Drink has fewer apps but includes niche transparency-focused platforms like Open Food Facts. Lifestyle is rarely used for barcode nutrition apps. To maximize reach and visibility, Food Remedy should align with Health & Fitness on both platforms.

COMPETITORS BENCHMARKING

App	Category	Downloads	Rating	Focus
MyFitnessPal	Health & Fitness	100M+ installs	4.5/5	Calorie counter, diet logging, barcode scanning

RECOMMENDATION & ANALYSIS

After carefully reviewing all the different category, here's the final findings;

- Health & Fitness dominates, with high-ranking apps and user adoption.
- Food & Drink has lower competition but weaker discoverability.
- Lifestyle is rarely leveraged for barcode scanners.
- Niche apps (FoodIQ, OneLabel, Purecheck, IntolerAPP) remain regional or experimental, with limited presence.

Recommendation: Food Remedy should position itself under Health & Fitness on both iOS App Store and Google Play. This category maximizes visibility, aligns with user expectations, and places Food Remedy alongside top-performing apps like MyFitnessPal and Fooducate.
